Although some properties or agencies may require background checks, there may be a way for a person with past criminal history issues to still be able to move into a property. This is described as "Reasonable Accommodations". Reasonable Accommodation: If a property manager denies assistance to an applicant with a mental illness based on a past criminal history, the applicant can ask that the management disregard the criminal history in light of the mitigating circumstances related to the illness. This request could be reasonable if the applicant is currently receiving supportive services for medication management. It is up to the applicant to provide the documentation for review by the managing entity.
